Research Interests

Description of Research and Scholarly or Creative Objectives

My primary research interest is climate dynamics. I use numerical models of the climate system to study changes in climate, both past and future, with a goal of better understanding the mechanisms responsible for such changes.

Curricular Development - Courses and Programs Developed

- 2006-2007 | Proposed and developed a new, team-taught graduate course entitled “Fundamentals of Atmospheric Science” (two-semester sequence). This course is required for students in the Graduate Program in Atmospheric Science. Its purpose is to provide a foundation in atmospheric science for students entering the program without an undergraduate degree in atmospheric science or meteorology, and to ensure that all students in the program are prepared for more advanced courses. This course was first offered in the 2007-08 academic year.
- 2004-2005 | Led the development of the Graduate Program in Atmospheric Science and served as its first graduate program director. This program originated as an option in the Graduate Program in Environmental Sciences and was promoted to full graduate program status in an effort to improve the academic experience for atmospheric science students and increase the attractiveness of Rutgers to prospective students at other domestic universities.
- 2003-2004 | Developed a new graduate course at Rutgers University entitled “Mechanisms of Past Climate Change.” This course combines lectures and readings to address cutting-edge problems in the study of past climates. A primary goal of this course is to provide students with experience in critically evaluating hypotheses and the evidence offered to support them.
